Professional Boundaries for Aboriginal Workers

It is often very challenging for Aboriginal workers living and working with community members to develop and maintain appropriate professional and personal boundaries.

This workshop will explore the main aspects of managing professional boundaries while confronting some of the difficult aspects of working with family and community while maintaining cultural respect and integrity.

Learning Outcomes:

- Increased understanding of the importance of building and maintaining professional boundaries
- Increased knowledge of what constitutes professional boundaries
- Increased confidence in balancing work and personal/community involvement
- Increased ability to communicate effectively with clients and other stakeholders

Facilitator: Kara Eddington is Psychologist, counsellor and educator who has lived and worked throughout Australia, Fiji, Samoa, North America & Africa. In 2007-2008 she was employed as the co-ordinator and Trainer of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander MHFA Instructor. Kara has run numerous workshops with indigenous and non-indigenous communities, Women's groups, teachers and students throughout Australia.
