Professional & Personal boundaries - when working within your Community

Are you a CALD front-line employee working with people from your own community? If you are, this workshop is for YOU!

The Workshop will explore physical, mental and emotional personal boundaries. Healthy professional and personal boundaries are essential to ensure that you and your clients are safe and respected. However, when you work within the same community and share the same culture as your clients, boundaries can become blurred quite easily. The compassionate and nurturing qualities which workers bring to community services tend to make them vulnerable to the blurring of these boundaries, along with fatigue.

We will explore clear boundaries, boundary crossing and violations and also the warning signs and preventative measures to keep you and your clients safe.

Learning Outcomes:

- Recognise boundary issues in your own professional and personal lives;
- Develop strategies to respond to boundary issues;
- Gain awareness of the importance of professional identities and reputation ; and
- Acknowledge and recognise your own boundary limits & explore effects of gossips.

Facilitator : Debbie Deasy is a registered psychologist and qualified trainer. Debbie has over 14 years' experience in counselling (AOD, community settings, staff support, educational settings, generalist settings and private practice) and has been training for over Six years in metropolitan and regional NSW. She has been involved in a consultancy role in supporting employees in peer supervision and tailoring workshops for organisations.
