Supporting Children with Complex Needs

This workshop will unpack some of the issues around working with children who are experiencing complex needs, including anxiety, trauma and challenging behaviours. It will also unpack some of the interplay between the child, parents and siblings, and provide participants an overview of brain development and practical strategies. The workshop will also provide participants an opportunity to reflect on their values and ways that they may help or hinder their clients.

This face-to-face workshop will be interactive and participants are asked to come with particular examples in mind, where possible.

Learning Outcomes:

- Increased confidence in skills in understanding the biological and social constructs of children's complex needs;
- Increased ability to engage parents effectively, and
- Increased understanding of appropriate referral pathways.

Facilitator : Angharad Candlin is a Registered Psychologist, Board Authorised Supervisor and Adjunct Fellow with Macquarie University's Department of Psychology. She has been practicing for nearly 30 years and has always worked with children, adolescents and parents. Angharad has a long history working in the field of adoption and parent education.
